'Jagged Little Pill' brings the music of Alanis Morissette to life

The new musical based on the hit album makes its world premiere at the American Repertory Theater. MATT JULI

Alanis Morissette joined the pantheon of international music superstars when her breakout album "Jagged Little Pill" debuted in 1995.

Offering a voice to a generation of angsty teens, the alt-rock record was an immediate success, selling more than 30 million copies and earning a spot on the list of all-time best-selling albums. Morissette won four Grammy Awards for "Jagged Little Pill," including Album of the Year.

The iconic record will soon take on a new form, as an all-star team of theater pros are bringing "Jagged Little Pill" to life in a stage production based on the hit album. The show will make its world premiere at the American Repertory Theater on Saturday.

Helmed by A.R.T. artistic director Diane Paulus, the project features a world class crew behind the scenes, including Academy Award-winning writer Diablo Cody, who wrote the book for "Jagged Little Pill," as well as music supervisor, arranger and orchestrator Tom Kitt, who earned a Pulitzer Prize and Tony Award for his work on "Next to

Normal." Kitt tells Metro that Morissette's album left an "enormous impact" on the world of music and was a perfect fit for a theater adaptation. "The reason why, for me, this felt like a natural theatrical endeavor was because I hear characters in those songs," Kitt says. While the production is based on Morissette's work, it isn't a biography of the artist. "Jagged Little Pill" will feature an original plot with characters played by Elizabeth Stanley and other performers.

Like a blockbuster Marvel movie, the bulk of the story for "Jagged Little Pill" is being kept under wraps. Kitt notes, though, that it will feel relatable, poignant and probing and will "bring to the table many issues that we're facing today," such as themes of connection.

Fans can expect to hear every song from Morissette's 1995 album and a few other tunes from her catalog.

If you go

May 5-July 15, Loeb Drama Center, 64 Brattle St., Cambridge, $25+, americanrepertorytheater.org

logue, as well as possibly a few new pieces she created for the show.

"She's been incredibly supportive to all of us," Kitt says. "You can see how much this means to her. She's offered such great, new thoughts that we've incorporated and, in our minds, have made the show even stronger."

'90s Boston band Belly is ready to rock again

Tanya Donelly opens up about the group's recent reunion and working on their first new album in more than two decades. MATT JULI

Belly plans to rock out like it's 1995 when they take the stage at Boston Calling later this month.

The band reunited for a small tour in 2016 and recently went back to the studio to work on their record, "Dove," after more than two decades apart. The album, which debuts this weekend, is a refinement of their alt-rock sound and came about after a successful crowdfunding campaign.

Ahead of the release of "Dove," we caught up with Belly frontwoman

Tanya Donelly to chat about the band's reunion, the new record and more.

Between the album, touring and Boston Calling, you have a lot of things coming up. Are you excited or nervous going into the rest of 2018?

Excitement and a little healthy dose of nervousness added because it's been two years since we played together live. But yeah, mostly excited and very excited for Boston Calling, which I've been an observer but never a participant at, so I'm excited about that.

What sparked the reunion?

The practical answer to that is that I had written a couple of songs with Tom [Gorman] for my solo series, and also with Gail [Greenwood] and Chil [Mott], her partner, and their band, so just the act of writing with them again separately sort of led to our drummer Chris [Gorman] calling and saying, "Let's try to rub-ber band this thing back together."

Was it hard getting back into the swing of things?

It happened very naturally, shockingly. I think the first day that we played together a few years ago after such a long break, we were walking down to Gail's rehearsal space feeling a little like, "What's going to happen?" Within 15 minutes everything just felt completely natural again.

How has the band's sound evolved going into the new record?

What I'm hearing back is that it sounds like us but it definitely sounds like the next stage, the next step, and I would agree with that. You know, Tom has become extremely talented and proficient in terms of tech, production and engineering, so that has been a huge bonus. We've become better musicians, I would hope, and I think my voice has gotten deeper, which I like. And just lyrically, there's more to draw from because I've been alive longer, so yeah, it does feel like us, and there are definitely songs where I feel like this is old-school Belly, and then there's the new ones that feel like we've moved forward.

Do you have any other big plans for 2018?

I'm working on a project of songs with Dylan in the Movies, which is a Boston project by my friend Brian Sullivan. He's one of my favorite songwriters, and he and I are going to start writing. We have been working on a batch of songs. We actually have the songs, we just have to start finishing them up. I just wrote a song with Marissa Nadler that I love, so I'm going to get that into shape once I have a spare minute.

The beloved Boston alt rock band is back and better than ever. PROVIDED

This Southie band is taking the world of country by storm

Meet Dalton & The Sheriffs, your new favorite country group.
MATT JULI

Most fans wouldn't expect great country music to come out of Southie, but one local band is changing those perceptions.

The bars of South Boston have given birth to Dalton & The Sheriffs, one of the most promising, up-and-coming country groups in the nation. Over the years, the band has quickly amassed a cult following, frequently drawing packed crowds at their nearly nightly shows around the city.

Singer Brian Scully, who first took the stage with other bands in Boston's rock scene back in the day, formed Dalton & The Sheriffs after building his own fan base with solo acoustic shows around Southie.

"We're one of the luckiest bands you're going to find," Scully tells Metro. "This all started in the bars of Southie as an acoustic thing that I was doing, and we've just been very very lucky that a small group of people showed up to those early shows and haven't stopped coming."

Channeling the sounds of everyone from Eric Church to Hootie & the Blowfish, Dalton & The Sheriffs puts out a unique blend of country and rock that's earned them some major gigs. The group has opened for the likes of Lee Brice, Sam Hunt, Thomas Rhett, A Thousand Horses and Eric Paslay, and has also performed at events like CMA Fest, one of the biggest country music festivals in the U.S.

The band is starting to make waves on the national scene, as their first studio album "After the Parade" landed at the top spot on Billboard's Heatseekers Northeast chart after debuting in 2017, and reached as high as No. 9 on iTunes Country Albums Top 10 list.

The growing success is all do to some seriously hard work by Scully and the crew, as the band performs almost every night of the week at venues around Boston, including Capo on Tuesdays and Bell in Hand Tavern on Thursdays. Dalton & The Sheriffs also hits the road on Saturdays, performing in spots outside of Boston like Rhode Island, New York, as well as the Chicken Box in Nantucket.

"The only nights that I don't have a show are Monday nights," Scully says.

Who knew Southie was such a hotbed for country music? PROVIDED

The singer credits student athletes at the city's various universities, as well as Kenny Chesney, for popularizing country music in Boston.

"It all sort of grew out of that whole Kenny Chesney experience," he says. "That and the fact that there are so many college athletes that come to the Boston area to play sports, some of them brought their musical tastes."

Scully somehow finds the time to balance performing with family life and raising three kids. Prior to becoming a full-time musician, Scully worked in education as a teacher, vice principal and even a dean of students at various schools in the area. He actually came up with the band's name in order to avoid nosy students from snooping on his afterwork activities online.

"I was a teacher in a high school and I came in and we'd written the song 'You Ain't Her,' and it had like a thousand YouTube hits overnight," Scully says. "Everyone was playing it in my English class on YouTube, so I tried to think of something weird."

As for what's next for the band, Dalton & The Sheriffs will return to CMA Fest this summer and hopes to continue growing their fanbase outside of Boston. But don't expect them to leave the Hub to set up shop in a country city like Nashville anytime soon.

"We would be we would be just another band if we left Boston," Scully says.

3 questions with EDM superstar Afrojack

Chart-topping Dutch DJ Afrojack brings the beats to Boston later this month. We caught up with the EDM superstar for a quick chat ahead of his show at The Grand on May 14.

How pumped are you to perform in Boston?
It's been a minute since I've played in Boston, I'm excited to be back with a fresh batch of music.

How have you evolved as an artist over the years?
Musically, I may have grown, changed, evolved or whatever you want to call it, but it's still the same crazy overwhelming feeling to make music or to play live, I don't try to challenge myself I just follow my own flow.

You've collaborated with so many great artists over the years. Is there anyone on your wishlist that you hope you work with in the coming years?

A lot of friend DJ's and producers I hang out with all the time would be great to work with, Zedd, The Chainsmokers, Alan Walker, Crankdat. I'll definitely try to set them up for some collabs. MATT JUUL

- BOSTON HERALD

Boston Conservatory alum takes the stage for 'The Sound of Music'

Lauren Kidwell opens up about playing Mother Abbess. SHIRLEY WANG

The hit production takes over the Wang Theatre this month. MATTHEW MURPHY

You might have heard of the protagonist Maria from "The Sound of Music," and of course, the von Trapp family, but when the curtains open this season at the Wang Theatre, the first person you'll see is Lauren Kidwell as Mother Abbess.

A graduate of the Boston Conservatory's MFA program, Kidwell plays the role of a religious confidant for the women at Maria's convent and starts the show with an a cappella rendition of the hymn "Preludium." A story that came from a book, turned into a play, turned into a movie, "The Sound of Music" is about a family escaping from 20th century Austria in the midst of a Nazi takeover, with trials of love along the way.

"This was a real time, this was a real family, and these were real people," Kidwell says. "That brings a certain level of energy and danger and excitement to this show."

Earlier this month, the soundtrack from the movie version of "The Sound of Music"

Lauren Kidwell plays Mother Abbess in "The Sound of Music." PROVIDED was added to the U.S. Library of Congress, to be preserved as a national treasure. The theater production has been adapted by director Matt Lenz and features a much younger Mother Abbess than in the film. Kidwell and the actress playing Maria, Jill Christine Wiley, are much closer in age, bringing a different spin to a role that's been portrayed on stage for 60 years.

"Rather than just sitting from her wise chair and doling out wisdom, she actually sees so much of Maria in herself," Kidwell says. "So she is able to help her in a very intimate and specific way."

For Kidwell, the religious component of "The Sound of Music" cannot be ignored. The climatic piece of "Climb Ev'ry Mountain" is "just one big prayer," according to Kidwell.

"I'm constantly praying on stage. There's all these moments when I have to bless people," Kidwell adds. "It's little moments that I have in character that're informed by my own faith."

The Patios brings puppies, beer and mini golf to City Hall Plaza

What's better than pints and pups?

MATT JUUL

Get ready to spend your summer days at Boston's City Hall Plaza.

The area is getting a new installation this weekend featuring everything from beer and ice cream to mini golf and adorable puppies. Dubbed The Patios, the fun-filled project will take over the plaza beginning on May 4.

Organizers are describing the space as an "urban oasis," where visitors can kick back, sip on brews and enjoy various pop-up programming, similar to the recent Boston Winter.

"We're excited to welcome the next round of family-friendly and fun activations to City Hall Plaza as the weather continues to get warmer here in Boston," Mayor Martin Walsh said in a statement. "Our partners at Boston

Garden Development Corporation have shown the potential in making the plaza a downtown destination for all with a record number of visitors at Boston Winter

Chill out at The Patios starting this weekend. PROVIDED this year, and I look forward to another season of success."

Wachusett Brewing Company will have its Air-stream trailer set up in a special Brew Yard so visitors can grab pints starting at 4 p.m. on weekdays and 11 a.m. on weekends. Wachusett plans to rotate its beers on tap as well as host tap takeovers.

Cambridge's Honeycomb Creamery is also set to have a pop-up ice cream shop located at The Patios entryway, while the Boston Public market will be on hand to provide picnic menus, samples and even giveaways. And you definitely don't want to miss "Wag Wednesdays," as Dedham's Schultz's Guests House will bring puppies by for visits each week between noon and 2 p.m.

Other highlights include a Bibliocycle by the Boston Public Library, which will bring books, storytime sessions and more by The Patios weekly, as well as a free, five-hole mini golf station.

The Patios features a design by Boston artist Jeff Smith as well, using reclaimed wood and an "infusion of greenery." Smith has also created a special "BOSTON" sign for the project that will be located by the entryway.

Make way for Romeo and Juliet of Boston's swan pond

For the 30th year, Boston's beloved swans returned to the waters of Boston Public Garden.

MORGAN ROUSSEAU
morgan@metro.us

Bostonians stepped out under skies Wednesday to witness the 30th annual Return of the Swans to the Boston Public Garden.

Mayor Marty Walsh and Boston Parks Commissioner Chris Cook welcomed the famous local waterfowl back after wintering at the Franklin Park Zoo. The swans, named Romeo and Juliet, will live in the Public Garden through the end of summer before being returned to zoo life. The celebration began with a traditional parade from the "Make Way for Ducklings" statue to the lagoon.

This year's swan fanfare included a brass band, face painters, a reading of "Make Way for Ducklings" led by the Boston Park Rangers, and children's activities.

AG calls for substance abuse prevention education in all Mass schools

As the opioid epidemic rages on, Attorney General Maura Healey is calling for substance abuse prevention education in all Massachusetts public schools.

This week, Healey announced on Wednesday, she'll tour middle schools across the commonwealth that have implemented Project Here, a public-private initiative to teach Massachusetts students about the risks of using drugs and the ways they can make healthy choices.

Healey is highlighting that program alongside local elected officials, mayors, faculty and students in Newburyport, Haverhill, Braintree and Taunton this week.

"Nothing we can do to fight this epidemic is more important than investing in young people," she said in a statement. "Through Project Here, more than 200 public middle schools in Massachusetts now have access to substance use prevention education. It's time to double down on that commitment and make these resources available in every public school in our state."

Since 2000, there have been nearly 14,000 opioid-related overdose deaths in Massachusetts, according to the state health department. More than 2,100 of those deaths occurred in 2016 alone.

Ninety percent of all adults who struggle with addiction began to use when they were under 18 years old, according to Healey's office, and 50 percent were under the age of 15 when their substance abuse began.

Educating young kids on these risks can help prevent substance abuse, experts say.

Since 2000, there have been nearly 14,000 opioid-related overdose deaths in Massachusetts.

Project Here is a $2 million initiative that was first announced in May 2017. It connects students to a support network of licensed professionals at The Herren Project, an addiction recovery nonprofit. Starting in the fall, students at registered schools will also have access to an app that allows them to learn about substance abuse and practice healthy decision-making skills.

Last week, Healey and the GE Foundation announced a new grant program from Project Here to fund substance use prevention education in public middle schools. Schools can submit proposals at here.world/grant by June 15.

"With partners like AG Healey and support from local municipalities, we're making real progress in the fight against substance use and the opioid crisis across Boston and Massachusetts," said Ann R. Klee, president of the GE Foundation, in a statement. "Project Here resources are already helping educate our youth today. These grants provide critical funding to prevent our kids from falling into the vicious cycle of the opioid epidemic."

Report: Ticks and mosquitoes are more dangerous than ever

Cases of mosquito- and tick-borne illness have tripled, says CDC.

MEAGAN MORRIS
letters@metro.us

Mosquito- and tick-borne illness season is coming — and it's not going to be pretty.

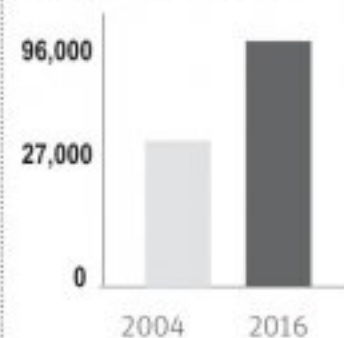

A new report from the Centers for Disease Control paints a bleak picture of the fight against tick bites (and mosquito bites and flea bites) and the diseases they transmit. According to the CDC, the number of cases of mosquito, flea- and tick-borne illness more than tripled between 2004 and 2016.

In 2004, the number of insect-borne illnesses reported to the CDC topped at 27,000 a year, rising to 96,000 by 2016.

Warmer weather is one of the factors to blame for the increase, according to the agency's director of vector-borne diseases, Lyle Petersen. Increased temperatures allow ticks to expand into new areas — and extended spring and fall seasons also extend the tick season, putting people at risk for longer.

The warmer temperatures also help mosquitoes breed faster and carry more viral loads, which is why mosquito-borne diseases like the Zika Virus are the most prevalent in hotter climates.

Number of insect-borne illnesses reported to the CDC

"I can't comment on why there's increasing temperatures, that's the job of meteorologists," Petersen told reporters, according to Wired, avoiding talk of climate change as the reason for the increase. "What I can tell you is increasing temperatures have a number of effects on all these [insect]-borne diseases."

In 2004, the number of insect-borne illnesses reported to the CDC topped at 27,000 a year, rising to 96,000 by 2016. GETTY IMAGES

WHY MOSQUITO AND TICK BITES ARE DANGEROUS

What we do know is that insect bites — especially tick bites and mosquito bites — can create serious health problems.

The CDC estimates that more than 300,000 people get Lyme disease every year, though only about 35,000 cases are reported. It comes from tick bites and Lyme disease symptoms like fever, headache and muscle aches start within a couple days of a bite from an infected tick.

Chronic Lyme disease — or persistent Lyme disease that doesn't respond to antibiotic therapy — can result in long-term problems like fatigue, joint pain, arthritis, Bell's palsy, numbness and heart issues.

Other mosquito- and tick-borne illnesses — like Zika, chikungunya and the West Nile virus — can cause everything from headache, joint pain and fatigue to birth defects.

These are the ticks you need to watch for in Mass

State officials have made specific warnings about the varieties of ticks common in the region.

MORGAN ROUSSEAU
morgan@metro.us

Bay Staters venturing outdoors this spring and summer should be vigilant to watch out for three types of ticks, according to mass.gov.

State officials warned that although ticks do not fly or jump, they do attach to humans and animals when they come in direct contact with them. They are mostly found in shady, damp, brushy, wooded or grassy areas, especially in tall grass. That can include one's own backyard, experts say. Here's what kind of ticks may be creeping around this summer.

Ticks do not fly or jump, but they do attach to humans. GETTY IMAGES

Blacklegged ticks

Blacklegged ticks, also known as deer ticks, are about the size of a sesame seed, and transmit diseases like lyme disease, anaplasmosis, babesiosis and tick paralysis.

American Dogs

Another common Massachusetts tick is the American Dog tick. These ticks are about a half-inch long and transmit diseases like Rocky Mountain spotted fever and tick paralysis, according to state officials.

Lone Stars

Another tick to steer clear of in Massachusetts is the Lone Star Tick, which is smaller — about a quarter-inch long — but packs a punch. They transmit diseases like ehrlichiosis, tick paralysis, and Southern Tick Associated Rash Illness (STARI).

How to be protected against mosquito- and tick-borne illness

It doesn't matter where you live; ticks and mosquitoes can find you anywhere.

According to the CDC, diseases from mosquito and tick bites happen in every U.S. state and territory.

Don't let that keep you indoors all summer, though: The CDC recommends using insect repellent whenever you're outdoors. Dr. David Shih, Chief Medical Officer of CityMD, told Metro that repellents with permethrin (found in brands like Sawyer, Repel and Nix) are the best.

And always wear long pants and sleeves if you're going to be in areas where ticks and mosquitoes like to congregate, like tall grass or wooded areas.

Boston-based Sea Machines is bringing autonomous tech to the world's largest shipping company

Boston company Sea Machines Robotics is making advances in the maritime space, just like how cars have been getting smarter.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

Cars have been coming out with artificial intelligence and automated tech features for a while, from systems that can automatically hit the brakes to alerts that let you know when another car, cyclist or other collision-risk is too close.

But drivers on land aren't the only ones who could use those benefits. Now, similar technology is coming to ships, thanks to a Boston-based company called Sea Machines Robotics.

Sea Machines, a Boston-based company, is bringing its autonomous tech to boats around the world with a contract with the world's largest shipping container company. PROVIDED BY SEA MACHINES

Sea Machines is exploring automated technology for the maritime industry, and recently made a big step toward the future of autonomous boats thanks to a contract with A.P. Moller-Maersk, the world's largest shipping container company.

"It's a perfect domain for autonomy," said Michael Johnson, CEO of Sea Machines. "Cargo shipping moves 90 percent of the world's trade — that's something not a lot of people know."

The contract with Maersk doesn't mean the Danish company's container ships will be completely unmanned. It's about bringing reducing errors, through Sea Machines' perceptual and situational awareness tech, to help humans at the helm.

That technology uses artificial intelligence and is similar to advanced driver assistance systems — those features like automatic braking and advanced cruise control found in the latest luxury cars. Unlike cars, though, boats have to deal with the dynamic environment of the ocean, which means multiple forces at play and some unpredictable challenges that can make it hard for human operators to maintain control.

Using cameras and radar, the Sea Machines system will be able to identify any obstacles in the way of the container ship and then track those objects with artificial intelligence.

This contract is a pretty big deal, the company said — not just for Sea Machines themselves, though the fact that a U.S. company won this kind of contract is notable, but because it's a step toward the future, and a more accessible world of boating.

"It's the beginning of a new era in the maritime space," Johnson said. "[We're] bringing this more efficiently and effectively into the commercial sector first, and then the whole thing is a path to the consumer market of recreational boating."

Advocates call on MBTA to switch to all electric buses

Environmental advocates, medical professionals and members of a public interest group are calling on the MBTA to switch completely to electric buses, saying the transition is necessary to protect the health of residents and the environment.

"The majority of America's buses remain dirty — burning fossil fuels like diesel that put the health of our children and communities at risk and contribute to global warming," stated the report released Thursday by the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (MASSPIRG).

The MBTA fleet includes diesel, compressed natural gas and diesel-electric hybrid buses. MASSPIRG is asking for the transit agency to transition to 100 percent electric buses by 2030.

"Cities around the world are making this exact commitment — this 100 percent by 2030 — including Los Angeles, Seattle, Paris," said Matt Casale, a staff attorney with MASSPIRG. "It really is a movement at this point. These cities are taking the lead doing great things, and we think it's time in Massachusetts — where we like to be first, we like to be leaders — it's time for us to step up."

Adult exposure to diesel pollution contributes to 27,000 heart attacks, 14,500 hospitalizations and 2.4 million lost workdays in the country each year, according to the Clean Air Task Force. Diesel exhaust has also been linked to causing respiratory disease and worsening asthma, and is internationally recognized as a "cancer-causing agent."

"The majority of America's buses remain dirty — burning fossil fuels like diesel ..."

MASSPIRG, in a new report

It's not just adults at risk — these health effects are especially pronounced in children, Casale said.

"It's not just on the bus, it's in the community where the bus is driving by," he said.

Though there is an upfront cost with switching to electric buses, Casale said that some of that initial cost can be covered by the Volkswagen Diesel Settlements. Massachusetts will get $74 million from the settlement, but federal grants and partnerships with utility companies can also help offset the cost of switching.

"Then, once you get past the initial cost, electric buses are actually cheaper for transit agencies to fuel, maintain and operate," Casale said. "If the MBTA switches ... over the lifetime of a bus, usually about 12 years, the MBTA is actually going to save money."

TRAVEL

You'll be sleeping with the lights on after visiting the St. Augustine Lighthouse after hours. VISIT FLORIDA

The Sunshine State's Historic Coast by night

Have a frightfully good time on a haunted excursion, a food safari or cocktail crawl. JACOB GREEN

When you think about taking a long weekend in the Florida sun, it's inevitable to assume you can opt either for activities in Orlando or misadventures in Miami. But just 30 minutes from Jacksonville International Airport (non-stop flights available) you'll find the perfect combination of things to do and places to party. Welcome to the Historic Coast.

Florida's Historic Coast stretches for 42 beautiful miles along the Atlantic, and includes St. Augustine and Ponte Vedra Beach. Also known as the "First Coast," this area was colonized more than 50 years before the pilgrims landed at Plymouth Rock. To this day St. Augustine is the oldest continuously inhabited European-established city in the U.S. And by night the place really lights up.

paranormal tour of the St. Augustine Lighthouse (staugustinelighthouse.com). Climb the tower from the Keeper's House, manned with an electromagnetic field meter, and meet some of the spooks who dwell there.

Still looking to commune with the dead? Visit Tolomato Cemetery (tolomatocemetery.com), a beautiful, manicured acre home to ornate headstones that reveal sneak peeks into the lives of around a thousand St. Augustinians. Before you linger under the great Apopinax tree, know that over a century ago the funeral procession for a young woman walked beneath its shade on the way to her plot, and she came back to life minutes before burial. She apparently sticks close to that tree to this day.

If you're really leaning into the whole 'historic' thing, you'll enjoy a meal at Columbia Restaurant. It's part of a collection of family-run restos that goes back five generations. Sip a pint of Coppertail Brewing's Free Dive IPA for some refreshing notes of Florida citrus, and then order several tapas (don't forget the pinchos morunos!) to accompany what's billed as "The Original Cuban Sandwich."

Libation sensations

It might seem antithetical to saddle up to an Irish bar so near a beautiful Floridian beach, but Meehan's is definitely worth a visit. Housed in an over 100-year-old building just down the street from the historic Castillo de San Marcos, Meehan's (meehansirishpub.com) hosts three venues in one — a tropical backyard bar, a fish house and oyster bar, and your traditional Guinness-on-game-day Irish outlet. The atmosphere's inviting and you're bound to meet friendly locals on site.

Love your cocktails on vacay? Visit the St. Augustine Distillery (staugustinedistillery.com) for a free tour. They are masters of small batch whiskey, rum, gin AND vodka. The local collective has one mission — "We knew that if we could bring some of the world's best distilling experts here, to the oldest and coolest small city in America, with access to locally grown sugar cane, wheat, corn and citrus, we could develop a finer quality spirit than just about any other place in the world." Put them to the test and grab a bottle to go.

Your survival guide to flying

We've compiled a list of everything you need to arrive at your destination as fresh and happy as possible.

Fodor's Travel

Chill pills

Ok, we've all heard stories about how Xanax and flying don't mix, but with all the stress involved with packing, traffic, TSA security and fighting for room in the overhead bins, it's essential to have something to take the edge off. Humm Nutrition's Big Chill and Beauty zzZz supplements will help you relax (and hopefully snooze) without the scary side effects.

Essential oils

It's just a fact of life that airplanes smell bad. Even though you'll likely acclimate to the pungent mix of jet fuel, recycled air, microwaved mystery

Pack your carry-on properly and you can find bliss ... even in Economy. iStock meat and bodily functions, it's nice to have something that smells fresh. Plus, some essential oils have the added bonus of calming properties. Pick up some lavender oil at the health food store and douse it on your airplane blanket and pillow. For something a bit more luxe, Tata Harper has a line of aromatic treatments that are nice enough to smell like perfume, but seriously help you chill. They're pricey, but your sanity is worth it.

Outfits for your feet

How many socks do you really need for a 20-hour flight? More than you think. First of all, there are the compression socks to increase circulation and reduce swelling — Comrad makes some totally cute ones. For plush comfort, I like to opt for an over-the-top fuzzy sock in chenille fabric. The other thing that's an absolute necessity is a pair of slippers. You don't want to have to put your shoes back on midflight.

A serious eye mask

One of the most important factors in getting a good night's sleep on an airplane is blocking light. Just how Kim Kardashian sleeps only on silk pillowcases, I prefer using a silk eye mask because it makes me feel like I'm getting my "beauty sleep." It's also lightweight and washable.

A specially-designed pillow

The Travelrest Ultimate Travel Pillow lives up to its name. Though it seems pretty weird at first, the design is genius. It attaches to your seat via the headrest and the seatbelt, effectively turning it into a soft wall to lean against — even if you're seated in the middle.

A coat that's also a blanket

All planes are freezing. Lighten your load with a coat that doubles as a blanket. If you're flying to (or from) a cold climate, Uniqlo's Ultra Light Down is a great option. The long coat is like a super-light sleeping bag that gently hugs you while in the air, and the hood can double as some extra pillow fluff. Cuyana's alpaca wool cape is better for warmer destinations because it's basically just a scarf.

Noise-canceling headphones

Wireless headphones are great, but you still need a pair of plug-in headphones to be able to watch movies on the plane. Your best bet is a pair of compact noise-canceling headphones.

The PXC 550 by Sennheiser are a super splurge, but with a battery that lasts for 30 hours, they're worth it. If you're not trying to spend half the price of a plane ticket on a pair of headphones, Bluetooth headphones from Altec Lansing are an excellent bargain.

Pajamas

Pack your carry-on like you're going to a sleepover. The best way to cure jetlag and kill some time during your flight is to impose an arbitrary bedtime, preferably around the same time you'd be going to bed once you arrive at your destination. Brushing your teeth and changing into some PJs can help trick yourself into thinking it's time for sleep, even if it's 11 a.m.

Ear plugs

Screaming babies, odd buzzing noises, conversations between chatty strangers, screeching announcements: There are plenty of things on a plane that you don't want to hear. Earplugs are infinitesimally small for the amount of comfort they provide.

A face mask

Dry air, dehydration and a lack of sleep make for a good chance of arriving at your destination looking ghoulish. Combat crypt face with a sheet mask from Lancer or Jurlique that will leave your skin hydrated and fresh. For a more low-key option, Dermalogica's Barrier Defense Booster and Calm Water Gel both can work as overnight masks, moisturizing and protecting your skin while you (try to) sleep.

Fancy moist towelettes

Whether you want to "wash" your face or dry away the night sweats, it's a good idea to carry a packet of Goodwipes.

A real toothbrush

If you're traveling for 10+ hours, you're probably going to eat a few meals at some point. Don't forget your toothbrush.

Chocolate-covered espresso beans

I understand if you're an addict who desperately needs a fix before the plane lands, but for everyone else: Do not drink airplane coffee. Try dark-chocolate-covered espresso beans instead. A handful of these magic nuggets will keep the wolves at bay until you deplane and can hunt down a proper cappuccino. Although they're a bit hard to find, you can usually pick some up from your local gourmet grocery, or order them from Jacques Torres.

Recovery gel

Trying to sleep while confined to a single airline seat is a recipe for sore muscles, so it's a good idea to travel with a recovery balm of some kind. You can kick it old school with some Tiger Balm or try out Tata Harper's recovery gel, which is made to soothe post-gym muscles but works for lower back pain caused by airplane seats, too.

Al Horford torched the Sixers in Game 1 Monday night. GETTY IMAGES

Al is 'average' no more

Horford has become this Celtics team's version of Kevin Garnett.

JAMES TOSCANO
sports@metro.us

Gordon Hayward went down – and without one of their superstars, the Celtics kept winning.

Daniel Theis and Marcus Smart went down – and without a big part of their depth, the Celtics kept winning.

And then Kyrie Irving went down, and just when you (justifiably) thought losing Hayward and Irving for the year would do them in for good – the Celtics kept winning.

Smart's back, but on Monday night in Game 1 of the Eastern Conference semi-finals against the Philadelphia 76ers you could add Jaylen Brown to the list of injuries... yep, the Celtics kept winning.

Brown, who's dealing with a hamstring injury, could very well be back for Thursday's Game 2, and that would be huge for the Celtics as Brown has used his second year in the NBA as a jumping off point – quite literally and figuratively – to becoming a star in this league.

But he is by no means the only one on this roster who has found success by being prepared for the opportunity presented due to injuries and roster make-up.

Brown watched as fellow Danny Ainge draft picks Terry Rozier and Jayson Tatum shined on the biggest stage, Rozier with 29 points and Tatum with 28.

While Tatum has been performing at a Rookie-of-the-Year type level for most of the season, the third-year guard Rozier has been the C's catalyst since Irving went down, going from cult hero to national treasure thanks in part to his trolling of Eric "Drew" Bledsoe, but mostly due to his knack for hitting the big shot.

And as for Al Horford, well, don't expect anyone to question his contract anytime soon. The C's anchor finished with 26 points in Game 1, which led to a wild stat sent out by the team after the game: The 83 combined points between Rozier, Tatum, and Horford are more than Paul Pierce, Kevin Garnett, and Ray

Allen ever scored together in a single game — regular season or playoffs.

Horford, Tatum, and Rozier aren't the new Big 3. Please, don't run with that. But perhaps there are a few comparisons from that 2008 championship team.

Here's one that shouldn't blow your mind: Al Horford is this team's Kevin Garnett.

It's actually pretty obvious at this point, too. Horford, who plays the same positions Garnett did, is the defensive anchor and a facilitator on offense. He's a leader, makes smart decisions, and hits big shots when he decides to take them. Sound familiar?

You'll notice a few more flexes out of Horford in this year's playoffs than you've seen in the past, too. The emotion is there, though nobody is going to compare with Garnett's intensity.

Perhaps the biggest difference between the two right now? Horford's shooting.

"I feel like he's really, just really locked in," Celtics head coach Brad Stevens said of Horford after his 10-for-12 night. "He's done a good job of knowing when to roll and

Al Horford is averaging 19.1 points per game this postseason, the highest playoff point average of his career. This is the 10th NBA postseason Horford has played in.

post and play kind of an interior spot, and then knowing when to pop and space those type of things. And he's – I said this at the beginning of the year – he's gone from a very good mid-range shooter to a very good three-point shooter. Now he's just an excellent shooter."

Those who haven't watched will scoff at the comparison, much like they've scoffed at the C's chances of doing anything special this year.

But maybe Game 1's win over the favored Sixers, a team that came in on six days rest and with all the hype surrounding phenoms Joel Embiid and Ben "not a rookie" Simmons, should be the one that finally – finally! – gets you to understand that this team won't go as far as you believe they'll go, but as far as they believe they can go.

Terry Rozier's confidence is at an all-time high. GETTY IMAGES

C'S HIT JACKPOT WHEN THEY DRAFTED ROZIER

Raise your hand if you saw this coming.

Put your arm down. You're a liar.

You had no idea Terry Rozier would be dominating like this for the Boston Celtics in 2018, let alone in the 2018 NBA Playoffs. Unless your name is Danny Ainge, of course.

Ainge drafted Rozier out of Louisville, with the No. 16 overall pick in the 2015 NBA Draft. It was Ainge's first of two first-round selections that year. His other pick in the first round was R.J. Hunter at No. 28 overall. We don't have to talk about that one.

Anyways, here we are in Rozier's third season, and he's the top dog on a Celtics team that's been decimated with injuries. That's right, I said "top dog."

Having lost Kyrie Irving late in the season to multiple knee procedures, I saw a talented — but young — Celtics squad that thrived off the presence of a veteran like Marcus Morris. He had experience, he could shoot, he was physical, and he was a no-nonsense type of guy. Before Marcus Smart returned in Game 5 of their first-round series against the Milwaukee Bucks, these C's needed someone like Morris more than anyone else who was healthy, in my opinion.

The Celtics won that first-round series in seven games. And here they are now, up 1-0 on the Philadelphia 76ers in the second round, with the winner taking on the winner of the Cleveland Cavaliers and Toronto Raptors in the Eastern Conference Finals. Game 2 is Thursday night at the Garden.

Rozier is the starting point guard. He's averaging 36 minutes a game in these first eight playoff games. And he finished the Game 1 win over Philly with a playoff career-high 29 points while shooting 7-for-9 from behind the three-point line.

This is Rozier's team now. And the 24-year-old point guard has embraced it.

Don't act like that's some easy accomplishment, either. Since entering the league in 2015, Rozier has played behind two All-Star point guards in Isaiah Thomas and, most recently, Irving.

As Thomas' backup in last year's playoffs, Rozier averaged just 16 minutes per game and 5.6 points per game as the Celtics marched to the East Finals. For most of this season, Rozier found himself backing up Irving. And Irving was expected to get the Celtics to the East Finals at the very least, if not the NBA Finals.

So, needless to say, Rozier has some big shoes to fill. But he's not just filling them. He's taking them off and smashing his opponents over the head with them and then knocking down a three while they're stunned.

And I can honestly tell you that I did not expect to see this.

When Rozier was drafted at No. 16 overall, it was a complete surprise to me. I can remember filling in on local sports radio the night of that draft, saying that the Celtics should have traded up — with Philadelphia — for No. 3 overall so that they could take Jahlil Okafor, after the Los Angeles Lakers decided to draft D'Angelo Russell at No. 2.

I remember being confused about the Rozier pick, as in, "Wait a minute, who did the Celtics just take?" And, "They're going to make both first-round picks instead of trading up?"

Perhaps my confusion was more about Ainge not moving up the draft board with a trade. But regardless, there was confusion with the pick. And if you had told me that night that Rozier would be this dominant while leading the Celtics as the starting point guard in his third season, just three wins away from a very realistic trip to the Eastern Conference Finals, I would have laughed in your face.

I'm glad Rozier and Ainge are the ones laughing now though. I'm glad that Ainge was the one who saw this coming.

Because I certainly did not.

Sox finally hitting the long ball again

Boston's power numbers are up after a weak 2017 showing.

MATT BURKE
sports@metro.us

The Red Sox finished dead last in the American League in home runs last season, hitting just 168. Compared with the No. 1 Yankees, who bashed 241 in 2017, it was clear that the Sox had to do something to help out in the power department this season.

Adding JD Martinez certainly has helped as he has six homers so far this season, but Martinez is being out-paced on his own team

Mookie Betts has 11 home runs so far this season. GETTY IMAGES this year. Mookie Betts now has 11 round-trippers to his name this season, leading the Sox. The three homers Betts hit Wednesday afternoon against the Royals made him the first player in MLB history to have four 3-home run games before turning 26-years-old.

As a team the Sox have 34 home runs so far this season, good for eighth in the American League.

Betts and Martinez are leading the way for sure, but Rafael Devers (4), Mitch Moreland (4), Hanley Ramirez (3), Eduardo Nunez (3) and Xander Bogaerts (3) have also helped make the Sox a long ball threat once again.

On the road again

The Red Sox won't play a game at Fenway again until May 14 as they take to the road to take on the Rangers, Yankees and Blue Jays in respective series'. Leading things off are the Rangers, who are one of the worst teams in the AL with a 12-20 mark.

David Price (2-3, 3.78 ERA) will get the ball for the Sox in the series opener Thursday night and will be opposed by Mike Minor (2-1, 4.33 ERA).

It's a big outing for Price, who got off to a great start to the season but has endured back-to-back ugly outings.

As for the rest of the series - Rick Porcello (4-0, 2.23 ERA) is slated to throw for the Sox on Friday night with Eduardo Rodriguez (3-0, 4.78 ERA) set to go Saturday and Chris Sale (2-1, 2.14 ERA) slated to go Sunday afternoon.

CITATION

Docket No. 18P0559

Commonwealth of Massachusetts

The Trial Court

Probate & Family Court

William Howard, Jr.

Suffolk Division

To all interested persons: A petition has been filed by: William Miller requesting: The Court Vacate the previous determination of heirs and amend petition to include Petitioner as a one half Heir-at-Law. As reasons for this, the Petitioner states that fraud was committed by Angela Fuller. She intentionally misrepresented to the Court and concealed the fact that I am also a Biological son of the Decedent.

You have the right to obtain a copy of the Petition from the Petitioner or at the Court. You have a right to object to this proceeding. To do so, you or your attorney must file a written appearance and objection at this Court before 10:00 a.m. on May 24, 2018.

This is NOT a hearing date, but a deadline by which you must file a written appearance and objection if you object to this proceeding. If you fail to file a timely written appearance and objection followed by an Affidavit of Objections within thirty (30) days of the return date, action may be taken without further notice to you.

WITNESS, Brian J. Dunn, First Justice of this Court.

Aries Do the best you can and avoid negative people. It's important to gravitate toward people who share your vision and spark your imagination. Romance will improve your life.

Taurus Making an adjustment to your expenses is a good place to start if you want to make your cash flow a little smoother. Stop talking and start taking action.

Gemini Don't feel obligated to say yes to everyone who asks you for something. Draw the line if you don't want someone to take advantage of you.

Cancer By assisting others, you will help yourself. Giving back and sharing what you know with the people around you will help you gain support.

Leo Do something different or get involved in a group that offers insight into new ways to use old skills. Expand your awareness by listening more and talking less.

Virgo Taking part in an event will bring you in touch with someone whom you can benefit or learn from. Explore all possibilities and question anything that isn't clear.

Libra Use your intuitive intelligence when dealing with domestic issues, partners or anyone who needs your help. Understanding what's going on will help you find a workable solution.

Scorpio How you go about getting things done will make a difference. Make use of your physical abilities and get the grunt work out of the way to avoid complaints.

Sagittarius Home, family and happiness should be your priorities. Don't let the little things get to you. Offer love and help to the people who mean the most to you.

Capricorn You may feel like talking and discussing your personal business, but be careful whom you open up to. Sharing information can change the way someone views you.

Aquarius Finish what you start. A positive change regarding how you make or handle your money is apparent. Home, personal improvements, family and romance are favored.

Pisces Keep your story straight. Emotions can bring out the best and the worst in you and in others. Stick to the truth and offer compassion and understanding. EUGENIA LAST
